UK Outlook for Tuesday 1 Jun 2021 to Thursday 10 Jun 2021:
An anticyclonic pattern will continue to bring warm, settled conditions across many areas during next week. However, a band of rain will impact the far northwest, bringing more unsettled and cooler weather here for a time. Whilst there is still likely to be a good deal of dry weather for the first week of June, showers, which could be heavy and possibly thundery, and prolonged spells of rain become more likely across the south and west from midweek onwards. Temperatures most likely remaining around or above average. By the end of the period, a northwest to southeast split in conditions becomes more probable; more unsettled and cooler in the northwest, drier and warmer in the southeast.
